

Interactive Continuing Education

(ICE)

The Office of Distance Education offers a variety of Interactive Continuing Education (ICE) courses throughout the academic year. These courses are designed to help your school district meet the needs of teachers, parents and students. All courses are free of charge and are offered on a “first-come, first-served” basis.

Some of our more popular offerings include:

- Parental Involvement
- ACT
- iGoogle
- TPRS Method for Foreign Language
- Using Wikis in the Classroom

Equipment Requirements

In order to receive ICE courses, you will need video conferencing equipment. If your school receives distance education from any provider, you probably have the correct equipment. If your school district does not have this equipment, a nearby college or community center may have equipment that you can use. Your group can receive the courses from any location that has H323 compatible video conferencing equipment.

Registration Information

If your district would like to participate in any ICE course, you can register by filling out the online registration form located at:
